

Very Important Jobs But Who Gets Paid More?

Police officers and sanitation workers – both do very important jobs, very difficult ones, and New York City can't survive without either of them. But who earns more? The police officer protecting your neighborhood? Or the sanitation worker collecting your garbage?

Experienced police officer
$59,588

Experienced sanitation worker
$68,354

The truth is, an experienced sanitation worker doing the job he or she was hired to do earns nearly $9,000 a year more than a police officer. Collecting garbage is a tough job, and those who do it earn every dime. Now is the time to pay police officers for the difficult and productive job they do and for the dangers they face every day.
